Report Highlights:

Indonesia's Ministry of Trade (MOT) amended meat import regulations amid rising prices, notably allowing imports from Foot-and-Mouth-Disease (FMD) zone-based areas. The regulation also formally grants supermarkets and the formal retail sector to sell imported beef. Steps have also been taken to expand the list of eligible beef cuts that can be imported as well as breeding cattle.

General Information:

Indonesia’s Ministry of Trade (MOT) amended meat import regulations amid rising prices, notably allowing imports from Foot-and-Mouth-Disease (FMD) zone-based areas. The regulation also formally grants supermarkets and the formal retail sector to sell imported beef. Steps have also been taken to expand the list of eligible beef cuts that can be imported as well as breeding cattle. The amendment, MOT 37/2016, was published on May 23, 2016, updating MOT regulation 5/2016 (see GAIN ID 1609).

The Ministry of Trade’s new rules permit the importation of livestock products from FMD-free zones within a country. The meat regulation also formally allows supermarkets and modern retail shops to sell imported beef. Although the regulation change is an improvement, imported beef has been readily available in Indonesian supermarkets prior to the change, and additional imports appear unlikely.

Amendment 37/2016 also loosens restrictions on the variety of meat cuts which can be exported to Indonesia. Under previous regulations, Indonesia limited beef imports to a specific list of cuts. According to the new amendment, the Ministry of Trade will issue import permits for cuts not listed on the approved list, but only if the importer has received an import recommendation from the Ministry of Agriculture. Post notes that the Ministry of Agriculture has not provided any new guidelines regarding their procedures for issuing import recommendations, nor have they revised their approved list of beef cuts for import.

Appendixes III and IV of amendment 37/2016 have added productive bulls and breeding heifers to the list permitted for import, implying that the Government of Indonesia is seeking to improve local breeding stock and increase local beef (and possibly dairy) production.
